Rider's Corner

Safety tips, riding tips, and more!

Look Not Where You're Going, But Where You Want to Go

We often hear this advice, and it's very important. It's all about where you look when you're riding a motorcycle. This concept called, "target fixation", can cause accidents. Here's how it usually happens: a rider goes into a turn, and instead of looking at where they want to go, they stare at an obstacle in the road or directly in front of their motorcycle. But here's the trick: your motorcycle tends to follow your eyes. So, if you're looking where you want to go, that's where you'll end up.

Target fixation is something that happens naturally, but if you practice and remind yourself not to do it, you'll become a better and safer rider. Just remember to keep your eyes on where you want to go, not on what you're trying to avoid.
